Rise Up, Slow Down

LADOT launched its first Vision Zero community safety campaign on Hoover Street last week. Multicultural Communities for Mobility and LACBC installed a public art series along this corridor to encourage local residents to check their speed. The message was "Rise Up, Slow Down" in commemoration of the LA Uprisings 25th Anniversary. The activation happened in parallel with a community march hosted by Community Coalition and LA Commons. The march drew hundreds of people.

Homeless Parking Citation Program Offers Restorative Measures

Last week, LADOT employees Teresa Mayer and Otamez Haddock, visited the local public library to launch the Community Assistance Parking Program (CAPP). The highly anticipated pilot program permits eligible homeless individuals to perform community service in lieu of payment for parking tickets while also assisting them by connecting them with other support services they may need. Currently, the city estimates that 3,908 vehicles are used as dwellings, and though not all of them receive parking citations, the number is representative of the homeless population living in their vehicles. CAPP will build on partnerships already being established by LADOT with the Los Angeles Homeless Service Authority (LAHSA), Los Angeles Police Department, City Attorney's Office, Mayor's Office, social service agencies, and homeless service providers.
